The Good – The Diono Rainier comes with Super LATCH connectors for secure installation; Can be fitted using the adult seat belt if your vehicle does not have LATCH anchor points; Steel alloy frame with aluminium reinforced sides designed to provide added strength and Diono boldly claims that it should last a full 12 years of normal use; Reinforced deeper sidewalls are lined with energy-absorbing foam for superior head and body protection; Extra Wide Head Wings; Head rest adjusts to 12 different positions to ensure the best fit; NCAP crash tested; Multiple recline positions; Deluxe Infant Body Support Cushion; Folds flat for easy travel; Can fit 3 in a row due to its narrow profile (same as Radian at base – 17 inches, but wider at the top – 23 inches); Safe Stop 5-point harness; Rear-facing tether connector strap; machine washable seat cover; Rear Facing up to 50lbs (5 lbs more than the Diono Radian RXT).

The Bad - Expensive (but it may be the only seat you will ever need to buy for your child).

The Bottom Line - The Diono Radian RXT was one of the most popular child car seats on the market. The Rainier takes all of the good features of the Radian and improves upon them. I particularly like the wider, thicker side wings at the head area and the increased rear-facing weight limit (50 lbs) for reasons explained fully below. At 90 lbs it has the highest top weight limit for any harness to booster car seat. Whilst the Britax Pinnacle 90 and Frontier 90 seats can be used harnessed up to 90 lbs, they cannot be used from birth like the Rainier can. Overall I love the improved look and safety features on this seat.
